Course Description

This course is an introduction to the philosophy of Sustainability and Project Management. It introduces the history and basic principles of project management. The course discusses the most important aspects of project management through the initiation, development, execution and closure phases of the project, going over historical examples, and discussing the evolution of project management to its present form. The implications on the organizational culture and best practices are discussed. Concepts of scheduling, budgeting, risk estimation and scope management are examined.

Course Learning Outcomes

Upon successful completion of this course, you will be able to reliably demonstrate the following Course Learning Outcomes which will be taught and evaluated:

- 1.) Communicate understanding of the philosophy of project selection using the Net Present Value method
- 2.) Communicate understanding of the theory of budgeting and scheduling
- 3.) Communicate how the concepts of Project Management relate to real life examples
- 4.) Identify the consequences to society of bad project planning
- 5.) Communicate understanding of the theory of progress management
- 6.) Discuss the problems of managing people and leveling other allocated resources
- 7.) Communicate understanding of organizational implications of closing the project
- 8.) Communicate understanding of negotiation theory
- 9.) Communicate effectively in a global environment
- 10.) Identify the use of sustainability in designs and project management

Academic Integrity

Academic offences are very serious. Consequences range from assignment of a “0” grade all the way to expulsion from the College.

What are common examples of academic offenses?

- Submitting the writing, files, code or data of another without proper references
- Possessing unauthorized material or aids in a test or examination
- Using the same assignment for 2 courses
- Aiding and abetting anyone in an Academic Offence (letting someone see your work on a USB etc...)
- Any unauthorized communication during a test or exam

Who is penalized for an academic offense?

There are typically two offenders for an academic offense. The person who shared their information and the person who used that information. By asking your classmates to share their work or communicate during a test you are jeopardizing their integrity, and therefore their grades.

The golden rule: If you have any questions about the integrity of your work, or how to assign proper credit to shared work check with your professor BEFORE YOU SUBMIT. By submitting your work, you are putting your name to the quality and integrity of what you have submitted.
